THE BACCHANAL'S SONG.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST,
BY WILLIAM H. McCALLISTER.

Fill up, fill up the sparkling cup,
Deep, deep with the wine's red glow,

For when we drink we die, and see

Cirrus Death in each bright beam we see.

Oh, how the glasses chink, of mirth we'll think,

But to glibly pass our lives.

Hark! hark! to our song, You drink and sing,

Keeping time with your clinking glasses,

Let us drink, and wake no more, no more.

These are cheered by infant moans.

Oh! why should we care if the hours are here,

And all children in rags are here,

We quaff at all our own, all our own,

Drunks though with the drinking jest.

We know full well their clothes we sell,

They don't need them, what we think;

Let them go without clothes—we don't feel the

On the cold? there's plenty to drink

Of what we care, if they die in despair,

Let them rot in the grave where we can see,

To have fun in the fire.

Fill up, fill up the sparkling cup,

Deep, deep with the wine's red glow,

For when we drink we die, and see

Cirrus Death in each bright beam we see.

The form of our suffering wives,

While the glasses chink, of mirth we'll think,

But to glibly pass our lives.

A Tale of Mesmerism.

WRITTEN FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST,
BY T. S. ARTHUR.

CHAPTER I.

"We are fearfully and wonderfully made!"

Among the mental and physical wonders for which the present age is distinguished, not the least wonderful is Mesmerism, or, as it is often called, animal magnetism. The phenomena it presents have astonished the world, as few as the most popular in many instances, because of the profusion of proofs, the boldness of the assertions, and commanding interest as humble workmen at the shrine of Mystery. The cry of "humble," "colossal," and all that greatest the advent of this preëxisting wonder, and has continued to accompany it in every step of its progress from men who believe in it, to those who doubt it, to those who sneer at it, to those who denounce it, to those who fear it, to those who hate it, and, finally, to those who despise it.

IRELAND AS SHE WAS.

We were surprised to learn, by an article in a late number of Chambers' Edinburgh Magazine, that Ireland at one period was the abode of wealth, literature and refinement. The remains of ecclesiastical edifices, with gorgeous carvings, may one of which would be the marvel of an English county, seem to have been all through the country. The traveller is shown books of vellum, to the ancient Irish character, bound in gold and silver and ornamented with precious stones, which are said to be worth, at the present day, thousands of pounds. Besides these gorgeous manuscripts, the Royal Irish Academy contains a vast collection of old documents, with some of the most valuable and numerous, others small and delicate, and it is said that a greater number of articles manufactured of the precious metals—such as coronets, rings, bracelets and crosses—have been found at various times by the peasant, and sold to the Dublin jewellers.

The writer of the article we have alluded to, goes on to say, as to all in which Ireland excelled, in the year 1600, was her "Barriers"—a country in which reigns a period of political and social anarchy, and where the nobles, the wealthy, and others, of every class, are in a state of constant alarm, and are daily exposed to the violence of the lawless multitude.

MARY WELSH.—The title is accepted. If the author, however, sends us any more tales, we hope he will take care to sign them.

PLAIN TALK.

The leaders of the different parties in the British House of Commons, have expressed themselves very plainly already, in reference to the condition of Ireland. Lord John Russell, is proposing to the House the measures demanded by the Ministry.

IRISH RELIEF FUND.

We have received and handed over to the proper Committee the sum of Fifty Dollars, collected for the relief of the poor Irish, and transmitted to us by Mr. John Woods, of Cass, Lawrence County, Tennessee.
